

About the Authors

Eric K. Yamamoto is Professor of Law at the William S. Richardson School of Law, University of Hawai'i. He received his J.D. from Boalt Hall, University of California at Berkeley. He was in private practice in Hawai'i for seven years before beginning his teaching career in 1985. In 1983-1984, he served as a member of the coram nobis legal team reopening Korematsu v. United States. He has participated in the litigation of many civil rights and human rights cases.

Professor Yamamoto's scholarship includes his recent book, INTERRACIAL JUSTICE: CONFLICT AND RECONCILIATION IN POST-CIVIL RIGHTS AMERICA, and numerous articles on civil rights, complex litigation, critical race theory and indigenous peoples' justice. He is the senior legal advisor to the Native Hawaiian Advisory Council, is a member of the American Law Institute, and has served on the boards of the Legal Aid Society and the Journal of Legal Education.

Margaret Chon began teaching law at Syracuse University in 1991 and is currently associate professor at Seattle University School of Law. While in graduate and law schools, she co-taught an Asian American studies class, which was one of the first such classes offered at the University of Michigan. Her current scholarly interests include digital copyright as well as Asian Americans and law. She teaches or has taught administrative law, civil procedure, computers and the law, intellectual property law, Internet law, legal writing, professional responsibility, and race and law.

Following law school, Professor Chon worked at the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, as a staff attorney and then as clerk to the Honorable A. Leon Higginbotham, Jr. She then practiced intellectual property law with Schnader, Harrison, Segal & Lewis in Philadelphia, and served an administrative clerkship with the Honorable Dolores K. Sloviter of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. She is a graduate of Cornell University College of Arts and Science (A.B. 1979), the University of Michigan School of Public Health (M.H.S.A. 1981) and the University of Michigan Law School (J.D. cum laude 1986). She has two children.

Carol L. Izumi is a graduate of Oberlin College and Georgetown University Law Center. She has been a member of the full-time faculty at George Washington University Law School since 1986 where she is a full Professor of Clinical Law. During her tenure at George Washington, Professor Izumi has been the director of two consumer law programs (mediation and litigation) and has taught upper level courses in alternative dispute resolution and trial practice. She currently runs the consumer clinic and teaches an academic course on mediation.

Professor Izumi is a nationally known dispute resolution academic and is invited to teach at law schools around the country. She is actively engaged as a certified mediator, arbitrator, and skills trainer. Her scholarly research and writing has been concentrated in these subject areas.

Professor Izumi has been active in Asian Pacific American organizations for many years. She was co-founder and president of the Asian American Law Students Association at Georgetown University Law Center and secretary of the founding Board of Directors of the Asian Pacific American Bar Association Educational Fund (AEF). She currently serves as Secretary of the Board of Directors of the Washington, D.C. chapter of the Japanese American Citizens League (JACL) and co-chairs the chapter's Education Committee. Professor Izumi has been the Faculty Advisor to the Asian Pacific American Law Students Association at George Washington since 1986.

Jerry Kang began teaching at UCLA School of Law in 1995 following a clerkship with Judge William A. Norris of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals and a year of information policy analysis at the National Telecommunications and Information Administration. He graduated magna cum laude from Harvard University (B.A. Physics) and Harvard Law School. During law school, he was a supervising editor of the Harvard Law Review and Special Assistant to Harvard University's Advisory Committee on Free Speech.

At UCLA, Professor Kang has pursued teaching and scholarly agendas in race and cyberspace. He teaches Civil Procedure, Asian American Jurisprudence, Communications Law and Policy, and Cyberlaw. He recently authored a casebook entitled COMMUNICATIONS LAW AND POLICY (Aspen 2001). On race, he has focused specifically on the Asian American community and has written about hate crimes and affirmative action. He is also active with numerous Asian Pacific American organizations, such as the UCLA Asian American Studies Center and the APA Legal Center in Los Angeles.

Frank H. Wu joined the faculty of Howard University School of Law in Washington, D.C., in 1995. He teaches in the Clinical Law Center and in traditional courses such as civil procedure. Professor Wu received his undergraduate degree in writing from Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, Maryland, and his law degree from the University of Michigan. He served as a Teaching Fellow at Stanford University Law School. Before beginning his academic career, Professor Wu held a clerkship with the late United States district court judge Frank J. Battisti in Cleveland, Ohio. He then joined the civil litigation practice group at the law firm of Morrison & Foerster in San Francisco. While there, he devoted a quarter of his time to representation of indigent individuals. On leave of absence, Professor Wu worked as a campaign organizer with Californians United Against Proposition 187.

Professor Wu has written extensively on affirmative action and immigration. He has written on a regular basis for the New York Times Syndicate "New America" News Service and Asian Week. His work has appeared in The Washington Post, The Chronicle of Higher Education, and World Journal. He has also testified before Congress on affirmative action and appeared on numerous television and radio programs. He has served on the Board of Directors of the Asian Pacific American Bar Association Educational Fund (AEF), the Advisory Board of the Minority Fellows Program of the Washington Center, and the Professions Fellowship Selection Panel of the American Association of University Women.